iBosses Methodology
Entrepreneurship Maturity Model™

8 Level 8 Actualization

- Go on to become a serial entrepreneur, entrepreneur mentor, entrepreneur researcher, author, investor and/or an acclaimed international speaker.
- The exciting journey of entrepreneurship doesn't end here, so keep on creating!

7 Level 7 Fruition

- Cash out your business start-up and exit the market by selling them to big companies.
- Consider going for IPO (Initial Public Offering) for your business.

6 Level 6 Replication

- Replicate your business in other market segments as it has been proven to be a cost effective route for business development.
- Permit more units of your business to be opened in a shorter time.
- Give you a competitive edge against your competitors.

5 Level 5 Commercialization

- Secure a steady flow of customers and revenue in order for the business to be sustainable.
- Consider productions, distributions, marketing, sales and customer support for your business during this stage.
- Is also crucial for penetrating your business into foreign markets.

4 Level 4 Implementation

- Implement your business ideas.
- Guide you to cope with the most common issues when implementing your idea.
- Ensure implementation is coupled with a unique selling proposition.

3 Level 3 Validation

- Validate your business ideas before launching the goods and services.
- Help you tap on various markets around the world.
- Reach out to countries in various regions to validate your business ideas.

2 Level 2 Ideation

- Crystallise your ideas and passion.
- Develop, evaluate and scale new business models.
- Communicate to potential investors and customers how you will execute your plan.

1 Level 1 Passion

- Identify your true passion.
- Help drive your business forward in the face of overwhelming odds.

iBosses Methodology
Entrepreneurship Maturity Model™

Level 1: Passion

When an entrepreneur faces challenges and falls on hard times, it is the passion and commitment that ultimately get the business through to the other side

Level 2: Ideation

Our ideation process helps to discover a scalable and repeatable business model that generates sustainable revenue

Level 3: Validation

If you do not validate your business idea before investing time and money, there is a strong possibility that you may launch something no one wants

Level 4: Implementation

An idea implementation method is a blueprint to get customers and entrepreneurs running with a specific product or service

Level 5: Commercialization

At commercialization stage, business will be required to develop a marketing plan, determine how the product will be supplied to the market and anticipate barriers to success

Level 6: Replication

A well-planned business replication program permits multiple units to be opened simultaneously, gaining the competitive edge on any would-be competitors

Level 7: Fruition

It is the main objective for entrepreneur to bring an idea from concept to fruition as a way of "cashing out”

Level 8: Actualisation

Once entrepreneurs have achieved actualisation, they have attained the status of successful entrepreneurs

WORKING LIFE

Gen Y entrepreneurs and their skilled seniors make a good team

By ARIEL LIM

TENSION between the old and young at the workplace is not uncommon.

At one end, the older worker may see his young co-worker as too raw and inexperienced to take on major responsibilities.

At the other extreme, the younger worker may view his older colleague as being too set in his ways to adapt to a changing environment.

Move away from the stereotypes, said Dr Patrick Khor, founder and group chief executive of iBosses, a company that mentors and trains entrepreneurs. There is no reason why they cannot work together and complement each other, noted Dr Khor, who focuses on Generation Y entrepreneurs, or those aged 18 to 35, as well as silver entrepreneurs, or those nearing retirement.

His book, iBosses: The Rise Of Gen Y Entrepreneurs, was published last year.

Each group has its own strengths, and working together can help the team avoid pitfalls, he added.

According to Dr Khor, the typical Gen Y entrepreneur is passionate, young and committed. "They have energy. They have passion and of course they have ideas."

Sometimes too many, said Dr Khor, who regularly advises young entrepreneurs to "narrow down and focus".

Ms Teresa Teo, who is in her 30s, founded Dove Doodles, a social enterprise that works with disabled artists. She said the "enthusiasm and energy" of the Gen Y entrepreneurs she has encountered has rubbed off on her. But "feedback has to be really exaggerated for this group" or their feelings might be hurt, she added.

As young entrepreneurs' edge lies in their mastery of technology, they can use this to reduce the financial risk of starting a business.

For example, they can use technology to develop prototypes and can gather resources, through crowdfunding, says Dr Khor.

He cited the example of the smartwatch maker Pebble, which raised US$20 million (S$27 million) within a month through Kickstarter to develop its latest wearable, the Pebble Time.

Young entrepreneurs, however, may lack the nitty-gritty know-how, especially when they seek to expand their business, said Dr Khor.

This is where older entrepreneurs have an edge. Having worked in the industry for decades, silver entrepreneurs can bring with them "specialised skills and experience".

He cited the example of chief financial officers (CFOs). "I think 90 per cent of those (start-ups) cannot afford a full-time CFO," said Dr Khor. But a retired CFO can start a "CFO outsourcing venture" and support "1,000 companies" through technology.

Dr Khor suggested that it may be easier for the old and the young to work together as entrepreneurs than as employees.

In a corporate environment, the issue of seniority may be a hindrance to a fruitful partnership.

But that difference is "not so significant" among entrepreneurs, as long as they have the mindset "that we're all equal regardless of our age and experience".

Mr Alvin Soe, 28, who founded media production company Supernova Group in 2011, said he would "definitely" consider partnering silver entrepreneurs to tap their life experience.

"If we bother to listen, it could save us from many hard knocks in life," he said.

Breaking out with a 'disruptive concept'

Local consultancy iBosses looking to raise $5 million in Australian IPO

Rachael Boon

ALTERNATIVE PATHS

We want to show people that with our training and consultancy services, start-up businesses today can systematically grow to a stage whereby an IPO or a trade sale is possible, within a relatively short period of time.

DR PATRICK KHOR, group chief executive of iBosses, on its planned listing on the Australian Securities Exchange

Former engineering lecturer Patrick Khor's newest firm iBosses Corp may be young, but it is planning a bold entry to the Australian Securities Exchange, on ASX.

It launched a prospectus for an initial public offering (IPO) Down Under on Monday, with a public offering of 25 million new shares at 20 Australian cents a share. The plan is to raise up to A$5 million (S$5 million), subject to a minimum subscription of A$2.2 million.

The firm is a Singapore-based training and consultancy set up in August last year. It offers advice, support and solutions to entrepreneurs and start-ups.

Dr Khor, 51, told The Straits Times the idea is to inspire the start-ups. iBosses works with "We are trying to implement a disruptive concept."

The group chief executive noted that most start-ups are familiar with the traditional way of raising funds at different levels – seed, Series A and B and so on – but this discourages a lot of entrepreneurs because it is difficult to find investors in Asia, unlike in Silicon Valley.

Dr Khor said: "We want to show people that with our training and consultancy services, start-up businesses today can systematically grow to a stage whereby an IPO or a trade sale is possible, within a relatively short period of time."

This is done via what the firm calls a maturity level model, which it uses to support start-ups at different stages of growth.

"By growing quickly and going through a listing by ourselves, iBosses wants to set an example of a possible alternative to the traditional Series A or B funding route, which can be more challenging."

The firm plans to build a digital platform – a community where entrepreneurs, investors and others can showcase start-ups – which also offers resources to each users.

Its staff strength has grown to 20 in a year, with licensees in Malaysia and the Philippines, and an office in Hong Kong and a third one slated in Australia.

Dr Khor said Australia is a good choice, having seen many of young firms, especially technology firms leave for the US.

Jeremy Lau, deputy chairman between Lau, 45, said Australia is the most appropriate market for the IPO, but he does not rule out a secondary listing in Singapore.

Lau said the preliminary response and indication from the market, the company is quite confident of exceeding the minimum fund-raising amount," he added.

Dr Khor started his career as lecturer at Singapore Polytechnic, teaching software engineering and systems analysis and design.

He was lecturer by the entrepreneurship bug and co-founded Machine Intelligent Systems International in 1993, and SSL Technologies Centre in 1997.

He also founded Path Education Group in 2004, whose business was bought by a public-listed education company.

Dr Khor planned to retire after that but "felt compelled to share his experiences and help entrepreneurship grow in Singapore". That was when he took on the role of senior lecturer at Temasek Polytechnic's Entrepreneurship Centre.

Some of the young entrepreneurs under his wing have tasted success. For instance, Mr Kingsley Poh and Mr Elliot Tan had to sell a company acquired by big Pan Pacific upto $1.2 million in 2013.

After five years at the polytechnic, he decided to leave to start iBosses. "I have had friends with young kids who were interested in business, and I saw more young people getting interested. They asked for advice and I felt it was a pity that I should not my own company."

Dr Khor now teaches at National University of Singapore on a sional-by, as iBosses has become a priority.

Mr Lau said the firm's target is to ring the bell in Australia on Sept 30. He wants young firms to dream as big as iBosses. "Don't think you're too small, too early or too young to achieve the dream of running a public-listed company in a world-class stock exchange."

调查：本地非最佳地点　企业欲快速增长或需赴澳上市

根据一份调查报告，由于本地股市津乏收益，他现快速增长的公司可能会跑到澳大利亚交易所上市。

跨国会计行瑞勤（Deloitte）日前发表的调查报告指出："新加坡交易所传统上注重效益，对于寻求高增长的公司而言，不是最佳途径。这为澳交所创造机会，使它可能成为区域科技公司的聚集地。"

本地网络公司Neiocentric与创业培训公司艾博士（iBosses）都是今年在澳交所上市的新加坡公司。

前者于7月上市，筹得1250万澳元，后者则已向澳交所提呈招股说明书。

清新德泰东信律师事务所（RHYLaw Taylor Wessing LLP）中国网络业务部合伙人姚劲雯表示，虽然了解，有些中国企业在新交所上市来逢，也会到澳交所上市。

她给的理由是，通过澳洲股市集资的科技、媒体与电信公司，去年与前年各筹得17亿澳元（约16亿新元），它们的股价也从2011年到2014年平均上扬12.9%。预计较小的澳洲科技公司今年会有新一波的上市活动。

"投资者对有全球发展潜能的高增长业务越来越有兴趣，这也加强这个趋势的发展。并纳市场资讯公司（Mergermarket）引述一家专为科技与服务公司聚资的集团本公司的业务负责人说，股市已准备接受成立不久、经验尚浅的科技公司，让更吸引风险投资者的机会有另一番挑战。"

报告指出，去年，新交所只有27家公司上市，共筹得3亿元。全都没有私募基金作为伙伴。

相比之下，澳交所则有74家公司上市，共筹得175亿澳元（173亿新元），港交所更是有108家公司上市，共筹得2250亿港元（约411亿新元）。

报告说："许多海外市场可能有比较优越的上市机会，如香港，但加剧带可观的额外成本与行政负担。过去一年来，有些繁荣的上市规则限制了没有获利记录的公司的上市能力。他们对于在亚洲市场上市路路不通。"

去年8月，总部位于香港的互星财务公司SpeedCast也在澳交所上市。

报告说，该家公司决定在澳交所上市是因为感觉有许多中型基金管理公司，使到它的市值达到2亿5000万澳元。

"将来可能会有越来越多亚洲企业考虑在澳交所上市，尤其是中国与东南亚企业。"

iBosses' eight steps to success yet to reach $100,000 mark

A fledgling Singaporean entrepreneur coaching company that is about to float claims starting up a business can be done in eight simple steps, but iBosses is yet to break the $100,000 mark for revenue at its own venture.

The one-year-old start-up is solely focused on growing its customer base and as such says in its prospectus, which has no financial forecasts and limited detail on operating history, that it is "unlikely to introduce any additional primary revenue streams in the future" outside of its mentoring service.

But chief executive Patrick Khor said he did not think the youth of the company would deter investors. "Track record today is a question of effectiveness and not duration," Dr Khor said.

"There are numerous companies that have emerged over the years which many felt came out of the blue. Some of these companies, by the time you hear about them, it is because someone bought them out already.

"Also, we are very new but very interested to show the IPO [initial public offering] path to our clients."

iBosses is offering 25 million shares at 20¢ in a bid to raise up to $5 million and begin trading on the ASX on September 30.

iBosses launched in August 2014 and offers training and coaching for aspiring and early-stage entrepreneurs. The company has a proprietary eight-step model for guiding its clients through business development – from being passionate about an idea to launching a company. It currently offers these courses and consultancy in Singapore and Hong Kong.

Singapore's start-up scene has undergone a significant transformation since the government began to pour hundreds of millions of dollars into stimulus and support programs for its fledgling tech companies.

The capital raised through iBosses' IPO would be used to expand more aggressively across Singapore and Hong Kong in the coming years, as well as into the Philippines and Malaysia. Dr Khor said iBosses was also keen to establish a presence in Australia to cater to the growing start-up and new-business community.

If the full amount is raised, $1.2 million would be invested in growing the company's new and existing business centres, $1.2 million into exploring and purchasing potential acquisitions, and $1 million into developing iBosses' online offerings.

Deputy chairman Steven Lau said the company had explored listing on a range of exchanges, both locally and in Hong Kong and London, but decided to list on the ASX as it was a well-regulated market that was increasingly popular with Singaporean companies.

"There is a growing trend of our tech and media companies sector going Down Under to list, so we felt that the ASX was the most appropriate for a company of our size; we are a very small start-up and the ASX is good for fast-growing companies," Mr Lau said.

The company is wholly owned by Dr Khor and his immediate family. If the maximum $5 million is raised, they will own 60 per cent of the company.

The offer is not underwritten and the IPO has a minimum subscription of $2.5 million to proceed.

iBosses will list on the ASX on September 30.
