Sydney|New York, 2 June 2021-- Dough Ltd (ASX: DOU) (Company or Dough) the AI-powered financial wellness App that helps customers autonomously spend wisely, save more and build wealth, is pleased to announce that it has formed a strategic alliance with OFX Ltd (ASX: OFX) to offer Dough customers bank-beating foreign exchange services, starting with 'Goodments by Dough' for brokerage free US single stock and ETF trading.

Commenting on the Company's partnership, Dough's Founder and CEO Andy Taylor said:

"We are delighted to announce this exciting partnership with OFX. They have invested a lot in building a robust platform to support fintech's to build and integrate new customer offerings. FX will become a key component of our platform offering over time as we look to facilitate investing in US securities, not to mention helping customers move money around the world."

Yung Ngo, APAC President, OFX said;

"International investment, particularly equities, has been a growing market for OFX so partnering with an organisation such as Dough who focus on making financial wellness accessible and understood is very exciting. Australians have long had a keen eye for international opportunities so the alliance between OFX and Dough better enables this."

Under the partnership with OFX Ltd, Australian customers will pay an FX fee to convert between AUD to USD in order to buy and sell US securities. OFX Ltd will pay a portion of this fee to Dough in the form of a revenue share. The new partnership will commence immediately with an initial term of 3 years unless terminated by the Company giving 90 days' notice.

Although the financial impact of the partnership is not yet determinable, it is deemed to be material as it results in the creation of a brand new revenue line for the Company. Commission free brokerage single stock and ETF trading is of significant interest to Dough's target market. The Company is therefore expecting strong uptake once the 'Goodments by Dough' App is relaunched.
