August review

In aggregate, global share markets were again firmer in August, with the MSCI All Country World Index rising 0.8% in US$ terms. The key driver behind continuing global share market strength however, remains the performance of US share markets, and in particular, the now very large tech stocks which have come to characterise this bull market. The S&P500 rose by 3.3% during the month, once again setting a new all-time high. More noteworthy was the performance of the NASDAQ, a US tech stock heavy share market index, which rose by 5.9%.

In contrast to the strength seen in US share markets, European and emerging markets recorded noticeable falls. In July, financial markets dramatically lost confidence in the state of Turkey's financial position and the economic policies of its government. The Turkish Lira has fallen by 42% since the beginning of July, while there have been substantial falls in the value of both Turkish equities and bonds. By August, these market stresses had spilt beyond Turkey, becoming a broader repricing of emerging markets risk. During the month the MSCI Emerging Markets Equity Index fell by 2.7% in US$ terms, with a 4.7% fall in China particularly noticeable. The Chinese share market has now fallen by 15.3% this calendar year. The fall out was not limited to share markets, with most emerging market currencies recording substantial declines as well, notably the Brazilian Real and South African Rand, which fell by 7.3% and 10.8% respectively.

While it requires drawing a long bow to tie the misfortunes of Turkey to the economic prospects of Australia, the Australian currency has always been heavily tied to emerging market fortunes, due to Australia's large trade surplus with China. In tandem with the moves discussed above, the Australian dollar fell by 3.3% against the US$ over the month.

During August one of our larger investments, Carador Income Fund, announced that it would be bringing forward proposals to liquidate the company and return capital back to shareholders. Our initial investment thesis in this company was predicated on this being a possible outcome, and since the announcement we have added significantly to our position at what we believe to be a very compelling level. The fund also opened four new trades during the month, in names that we plan to continue building stakes in for the foreseeable future.

Pleasingly, the manager has now substantially invested all the new capital raised during April and May. At the end August GVF was 96% invested, taking the fund back to being within its targeted investment range of 95% to 105% invested.

The investment portfolio increased in value by 2.3% during August. The fund's discount capture strategy added 0.3% to returns during the month, while the fall in the Australian dollar over the month added 2.0% to performance. The remaining attribution of returns are accounted for by positive underlying market movements and operating costs.
