

Allegra to Supply Australian-made and TGA-approved Face Shields
Media Release

SYDNEY 15th April 2020 – In light of the COVID-19 challenges being faced by the business community, Allegra Orthopaedics Limited ('Allegra') would like to provide the following update.

As a result of the severe and mounting disruption to the supply of personal protective equipment (PPE), Allegra is pleased to announce, it has commenced distribution of high-quality face shields which are Australian designed and manufactured.

Allegra has received significant orders, currently standing at 105,000 face shields. Discussions are ongoing with other major hospital groups who have also expressed great interest in the Shields.

Healthcare workers rely heavily on PPE to protect themselves and patients from contracting and also transferring COVID-19. These face shield, approved by the Therapeutic Goods Administration (TGA), has enabled Allegra to diversify its product range and provide Australian-made protective equipment to meet hospital needs now and into the future.

Allegra continues to monitor its operational expenditure during these challenging times, as well as measures currently in-place to keep staff safe. The addition of these face shields to Allegra's product range is expected to partly offset the negative financial impact incurred by Allegra as a result of the Federal Governments action to suspend all elective surgeries in both public and private hospitals

Jenny Swain, Allegra Chief Executive Officer, said: "We feel very proud to be able to supply Australian designed and manufactured face shields for our front line carers. The current demand for PPE illustrates the need for companies to be ready to diversify during this global uncertainty surrounding COVID-19. I am pleased to say that Allegra has been proactive in making this happen and more importantly, we are supporting Australian manufacturing."
