Market commentary

Australian shares delivered a positive return in February with the S&P/ASX 200 Index gaining +2.1%. In contrast, most major share markets around the world declined for a second consecutive month driven by a range of risk factors, including imminent interest rate increases, rising inflation and Russia's invasion of Ukraine. The conflict has generated significant supply concerns, particularly the supply of oil and gas, which has seen commodity prices rise sharply. Soaring commodity prices have offered some protection to Australia's share market which has high levels of exposure to a range of commodities and resources.

Overall, the February corporate reporting season delivered better-than-expected results and dividends, although company outlook statements were generally conservative.
