SIGNS THAT INFLATIONARY PRESSURES MAY BE STARTING TO EASE

COMMENTARY

- Global share markets continued to perform well in November upon signs that inflationary pressures may be starting to ease.
- Chinese stocks rebounded strongly when the government appeared to take the first steps to unwind its zero-Covid policy and more fully re-open the economy.
- The Portfolio returned 4.1% in November, while the benchmark returned 2.1%.

Market Review

The MSCI World Total Return Index, Net Dividend Reinvested, AUD returned 2.1% during November. Australian dollar strength detracted from share price gains.

Global share markets continued to rebound from the low point reached in mid-October, despite the US Federal Reserve (Fed) and the Bank of England raising interest rates. However, investor sentiment improved on better-than-expected inflation data in the United States and Germany, fueling hopes that US inflation has peaked. The Fed is now expected to reduce the interest rate increase to 0.50% at its next meeting in mid-December, following four successive 0.75% increases to the present 3.75% – 4.00% level.

Emerging Markets posted the strongest returns of any region during November. Chinese equities rose nearly 30% after the government partially eased its zero-COVID policy and unveiled a support package aimed at boosting liquidity in the property sector.

Portfolio Comment

During November, the Portfolio outperformed the benchmark by 2.0% as global value stocks outperformed growth.

All market sectors posted positive returns. The Portfolio benefitted from the underweight position in energy, but the overweight positions in cash and materials and the underweighting to healthcare detracted from relative returns.

The Portfolio's outperformance was driven by strong stock selection across most sectors, but especially in information technology and consumer discretionary.

The Portfolio continues to find high quality, durable growth companies in the healthcare sector. The eye care industry is characterised by high barriers to entry, fewer participants and good long-term growth prospects driven by an aging population. Yet stocks in this segment remain generally underappreciated by investors.

Alcon is a leader in both ophthalmic surgery solutions and contact lenses. It is expected to benefit from the anticipated growth in cataract surgeries and rising contact lens adoption in less developed markets. Sales fell in 2020 as elective eye care procedures and purchases were postponed during the pandemic but have since rebounded.

Alcon continues to innovate, creating strong demand for new products such as reengineered contact lenses which focus on easing dry eye and an advanced technology intraocular lens product. The company raised its full year guidance in its most recent earnings update.

The company's holdings in the semiconductor businesses ASML and TSMC contributed to the Portfolio outperforming the market during November. The cyclical demand for semiconductor stocks had left these companies attractively valued following a period of underperformance. This is now being discounted by the market, which is again focusing on business fundamentals.

Shares of Brazilian stock exchange operator B3 detracted from the Portfolio's performance in the financials sector. Investor sentiment has turned more negative upon fears that the fiscal deficit will rise in the wake of Lula da Silva's election as President.

The Portfolio's US holdings outperformed the broader market in November. Etsy is a global e-commerce company which focusses on arts and crafts created by independent sellers, often as a secondary income. The share price rebounded strongly after the company reported better than expected earnings due to improving consumer demand.
