Founders' Commentary

Venn Brown Independent Report on BTI

Independent research house, Venn Brown, recently published a 'One To Watch' interview with Bailador Technology Investments (ASX:BTI). This followed on from Venn Brown principal, Andrew Wilkinson, identifying the opportunity after watching BTI present at the ASX Small and Mid Caps conference, and subsequent engagement with the Bailador team.

Research analysts seem to invariably like the BTI opportunity, and often tell us that they buy BTI on 'personal account', but find it difficult to generate research reports in the normal form, due to BTI not disclosing financial details of underlying portfolio companies. BTI keeps detailed portfolio company information confidential, respecting our position as a minority shareholder in these mostly private companies, and the wishes of the individual portfolio companies and fellow shareholders.

This month, we are pleased to be able to share with you Venn Brown's 16-page report. The remainder of this Founders' Commentary section is the introduction from Venn Brown's report, which summarises our conversation:

Company background: Bailador is a listed investment company that invests purely in information technology companies looking for expansion capital. The constantly changing nature of the IT sector offers opportunities for outsized returns, while the expansion, hyper-growth stage presents an attractive risk reward balance to achieve the best returns.

Focus on quality: The fund focused on technology companies that have proven market fit, strong management teams, a huge addressable market, strong unit economics and an enthusiastic and dedicated customer base.

Capital Management: Bailador has a stated dividend policy of distributing 4%pa of the group's net tangible assets. This policy was designed to provide a balance between long term capital growth achieved through the outperformance of the investment portfolio, while rewarding investors with a steady and attractive, fully franked income stream.

History of outperforming NTA: With the share price currently trading well below net tangible assets, the market doesn't credit Bailador for consistently realising assets at valuations above NTA.

Outlook: The recent retraction of the tech sector and the hesitancy of investors in both the private and listed markets is presenting Bailador with a growing number of attractive investment opportunities. With more than $100 million of cash on balance sheet, Bailador is well positioned to capitalise on emerging opportunities as other investors remain cautiously on the sidelines.
