Global Health's Software platforms to support Woolworth Group's subsidiary HealthyLife initiative

Australian Healthcare application provider Global Health Limited (ASX:GLH) ("Global Health" or "Company") is pleased to announce its partnership with Woolworth Group's subsidiary HealthyLife initiative, in the implementation of their new telehealth service, which is providing convenient, virtual access to healthcare practitioners via a network of GPs, dietitians, nutritionists and in-house naturopaths.

Global Health supports HealthyLife's goal of encouraging pro-active consumer involvement in conjunction with their health care team. This is synergistic with Global Health's vision of connecting clinicians and consumers across Australia, streamlining the delivery of important healthcare services, and providing patients with better health outcomes across a variety of health sectors, including acute and community settings.

The rise of the COVID-19 Pandemic lead to a significant increase in telehealth consultations. The use of telehealth has rapidly scaled up, with more than 85 million telehealth services provided to over 16 million individuals as of September 2022. This position was strongly supported by the Australian Government, through programs such as mental health care plans, and for convenience to patients who could not access their regular GP visits due to Pandemic restrictions. Through this disruption to traditional health-based care settings, Telehealth was woven into the fabric of healthcare delivery in Australia, and platforms such as Global Health's SaaS platforms empowered patients to access critical care across a variety of settings in Australia.

HealthyLife works with Global Health to provide a third-party platform that connects customers with qualified service providers including General Practitioners, dietitians and nutritionists. Through this partnership with Healthylife, Global Health will be providing three SaaS platforms, including Hothealth for online forms, online appointments and telehealth consults, ReferralNet for Securing Messaging, M+ for Allied Health practitioners and Primary Clinic (Hosted) for GP's. Global Health is excited to be working with HealthyLife. This partnership highlights the strong confidence in world's best practice services that Global Health provides, and in our first-class healthcare software.

Mathew Cherian, Managing Director of Global Health commented:

"Our engagement with the HealthyLife team throughout the implementation of the new Telehealth service has been outstanding. Over the past three years, Telehealth has been at the forefront of consumers' minds all across Australia and has been an easy and safe way for patients to access health care providers in times where they aren't able to access their regular practitioners. HealthyLife's goal of encouraging proactive consumer involvement in conjunction with their healthcare team is strongly aligned to our vision of connecting clinicians and consumers."

This announcement was approved for lodgement by the Board
