Legal Action by the City of Chicago ex rel Aaron Rosenberg (qui tam action)

The City Attorney for the City of Chicago in the United States of America has notified the Company's U.S. subsidiary, Redflex Traffic Systems, Inc. (RTSI), that a qui tam legal action has been commenced against RTSI in the Circuit Court of Cook County, Illinois by Mr Aaron Rosenberg, a former Executive Vice President of Business Development at RTSI. We understand that this legal action was previously commenced by Mr Rosenberg, but by order of the Court, the existence of the legal action was suppressed and was not brought to the Company's attention until now. The City of Chicago has notified us that they intend to intervene in this matter and a status hearing will take place on October 6, 2015.

The legal action makes certain allegations against RTSI relating to alleged breaches of city ordinances and bribery of public officials in the City of Chicago during a period from 2002 to 2012 (which has been the subject of previous disclosures by the Company). Amongst other civil penalties, the legal action claims an award of damages treble the amount paid to RTSI by the City of Chicago under the now terminated contracts between RTSI and the City of Chicago. The claim alleges that the revenues earned by RTSI under the now terminated contracts were USD$100 million.

In a qui tam legal action in the U.S., a purported 'whistle blower' (called the "relator") is able to file a legal action as a plaintiff with the expectation that the matter will subsequently be transitioned to an alleged aggrieved government plaintiff (in this case the City of Chicago) to determine if the government plaintiff will take on the legal action for itself. Due to the City of Chicago wishing to intervene in this matter, Mr Rosenberg (being the relator) will cease the role as plaintiff. The relator typically has an expectation that if the case is ultimately successful in the Court that the relator will share in any financial recovery achieved by the government plaintiff.
