Adveritas Limited (Company or Adveritas) (ASX: AVI) today announces that it has entered into a material, 24 month contract to provide its ad fraud prevention solution, TrafficGuard, to Latin American super app¹, Rappi. Rappi is the largest on-demand food delivery app in Latin America, with operations in Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Perú and Uruguay. Rappi's investors include high profile funds including Sequoia Capital, DST Global and Andressen Horowitz, as well as strategic investor Delivery Hero.

After a successful trial period, Rappi chose TrafficGuard over competing anti-fraud tools to protect its digital advertising spend from fraud. During the trial, TrafficGuard helped Rappi to firstly save money that would have otherwise been wasted on fraud, secondly safely access new advertising sources, and thirdly improve operations by reducing manual tasks involved with reclaiming ad spend after fraud has occurred.

The signing of this contract marks Adveritas' first direct major client win in the delivery app vertical. The 24 month contract is for a minimum value of USD$360,000 plus additional fees if advertising increases beyond the volumes stipulated by the contract plan.

Rappi joins TrafficGuard's growing client base which also includes agencies, ad networks and mobile measurement platforms.

TrafficGuard's pipeline continues to grow and the Company is currently in multiple trials with potential new customers. The sales team has attended conferences in San Francisco, Barcelona and Singapore where several high profile prospective clients were in attendance. Increased marketing has led to greater brand recognition which shortens the sales cycle and is evidenced by the Rappi contract win.

Adveritas CEO Mathew Ratty said, "In a trial which saw TrafficGuard evaluated against other solutions, we were able to clearly demonstrate the superior sophistication of our fraud prevention to Rappi. I am confident that TrafficGuard will attract more enterprise-level clients in the near future."
