Highlights:

- archTIS has secured a Proof of Concept (POC) to implement policy-based access controls to the management of big data with an Australian Commonwealth Intelligence Agency.
- The POC will assess the benefits of dynamic, policy-based access to solve complex real-time sharing of data between Commonwealth and State agencies.
- The POC contract was awarded through the Digital Transformation Agency (DTA) Marketplace panel and is valued at $85,000.

archTIS Limited (ASX:AR9) is pleased to announce that it has entered into a contractual agreement with an Australian Commonwealth Intelligence Agency to run a Proof of Concept (POC) for dynamic, policy-based access control of big data. The pilot will assess the benefits of these controls to resolve the challenges of real-time cross agency data sharing between Commonwealth and State agencies to provide individually customised access to data. The duration of the POC is for 8 weeks on a fixed price contract. The outcome of the POC will contribute to the future capability requirements of the Agency's information sharing needs and may be introduced in additional phases of delivery if successful. The POC is expected to commence mid-September 2020.

Daniel Lai, archTIS CEO, said:

"The real-time sharing of big data sets between different organisations is a complex problem at the best of times. And this challenge is further compounded when there are high information security and compliance obligations associated with the management and release of different data and data sets. This is a significant global problem for Government agencies and I am delighted that archTIS is part of the solution."

This POC, coupled with archTIS' earlier contract win in May 2020 to help solve Curtin University's space tracking data sharing challenges, evidences the unique value of archTIS' intellectual property and the Company's growing software and services capabilities in the substantial big data information security market.
