

Beroni Group Published an Article Related to Single-Domain Antibodies in the FEBS Journal

NEW YORK and SYDNEY, Australia, October 28, 2021 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) - Beroni Group (OTCQX: BNIGF; NSX: BTG) ("Beroni" or the "Company"), an Australia-based biopharmaceutical enterprise, today announced that its article entitled "Crystal structures of the SARS-CoV-2 nucleocapsid protein C-terminal domain and development of nucleocapsid-targeting nanobodies" has been accepted for publication and undergone full review in the FEBS Journal. The full article can be viewed at <https://febs.onlinelibrary.wiley.com/doi/epdf/10.1111/febs.16239>.

The FEBS Journal is an international peer-reviewed non-profit society journal devoted to publishing high-quality papers reporting significant advances in the molecular life sciences.

The published article is related to the scientific findings derived from Beroni's current research of the development of a medical solution using single-domain antibodies (sdAbs) for the SARS-CoV-2 coronavirus. The Company has identified 2 crystal structures of nucleocapsid protein C-terminal domain. Nucleocapsid protein is a major structural protein of SARS-CoV-2 and plays an important role in viral RNA packing, replication, assembly, and infection. Through screening a sdAbs library, the scientific team has identified four sdAbs targeting different regions of nucleocapsid protein with high affinities that have future potential to be used in viral detection and therapeutic purposes.

"We are delighted to progress further in our coronavirus research program and to publish our new findings in the FEBS journal. The Company plans to carry out a series of experiments to gradually transform the results into clinical trials and find a new way for the diagnosis and treatment of the new coronavirus. Beroni hopes our efforts can contribute to the basic understanding of the SARS-CoV-2 coronavirus and the global development of antiviral drugs," said Jacky Zhang, Chairman and CEO of Beroni Group.
