Queensland flooding update – Baralaba mine

- Huddy's Mining Services whole-of-mine contract for Baralaba affected by floods
- No other mining service contracts affected
- Mining Products divisions performing strongly

Industrea subsidiary, Huddy's Mining Services which has a whole of mine contract at Baralaba has been affected by recent floods. The Baralaba mine owner Cockatoo Coal has recently announced that flood waters had inundated the main pit of its Baralaba coal mine.

Guidance on timing for re-opening of Baralaba main pit production is currently premature given the extent of flooding and uncertainty regarding future weather patterns. Cockatoo Coal announced on 7 January, that it anticipates a production delay of some weeks or potentially longer.

"It is still too early to determine the full impact on Huddy's operations as a result of the Baralaba flooding, but it is not expected to be material in the context of Industrea's results thanks to the diversification of our businesses and the strength of our mining products market positions in Australia and China," said Industrea Managing Director and Chief Executive Officer Robin Levison.

"All other parts of the business are performing well and as a result the flooding in Queensland has had a minimal impact on the overall Industrea business."

"While the impact of these floods on Industrea has been limited to our Baralaba contract, the floods have caused widespread damage throughout Queensland and tragically cost several lives. Our thoughts are with those that have been impacted by these events," Mr Levison said.

Huddy's is working closely with Cockatoo Coal to plan for re-commencement of operations and expects to be involved in remediation works once they commence.

Other mining services contracts for Huddy's in Mt Isa and Hunter Valley are currently unaffected by weather.
