INVESTMENT REPORT

MAY 2025

FUND COMMENTARY

We continue to believe that maintaining a long-term perspective amidst the current focus on US tariffs and trade deals remains the optimal path forward for investors. Just as global equities fell sharply in March and April, they continued to bounce back in May. We believe that businesses with strong and strengthening competitive advantages, laying the groundwork for significant and reliable growth over the next decade, should remain a clear focus amidst short-term volatility.

We remain highly optimistic about the secular growth trends – including in cloud computing, Artificial Intelligence (AI), and AI agents. The emergence of AI agents presents a particularly compelling opportunity that remains in their infancy and likely underappreciated.

Coding agents, for example, are a near-term focus due to their potential to expand profit margins across several tech-literate, R&D-intensive businesses that can leverage these quickly to unlock value.

Salesforce's new AI agent platform, Agentforce, is in its second quarter of production and reported strong early metrics in recent weeks. Not only is its annualized revenue of Data Cloud plus Agentforce greater than US$1 billion, but it is also growing at more than 120% per annum. It's also very positive to see substantial expansion already from early users: 50% of Data Cloud's Q1 new bookings came from existing customers; and 30% of Agentforce's Q1 new bookings came from existing customers.

Over in China, Tencent is positioned to be a leader in a special kind of AI agent: one that is unique to its Weixin ecosystem within which 1.4 billion Chinese users are active each month. These agents would empower Weixin users to autonomously complete tasks – including transactions – across the millions of mini-programs inside the ecosystem. What makes these agents unique will be their exclusive access to internal social graph data, content, and capabilities.
