Market commentary

The Australian share market delivered another lacklustre performance in November with the S&P/ASX 200 Accumulation Index down -0.5%. In the final days of the month, fears about the Omicron coronavirus strain dented investor sentiment driving market volatility around the world.

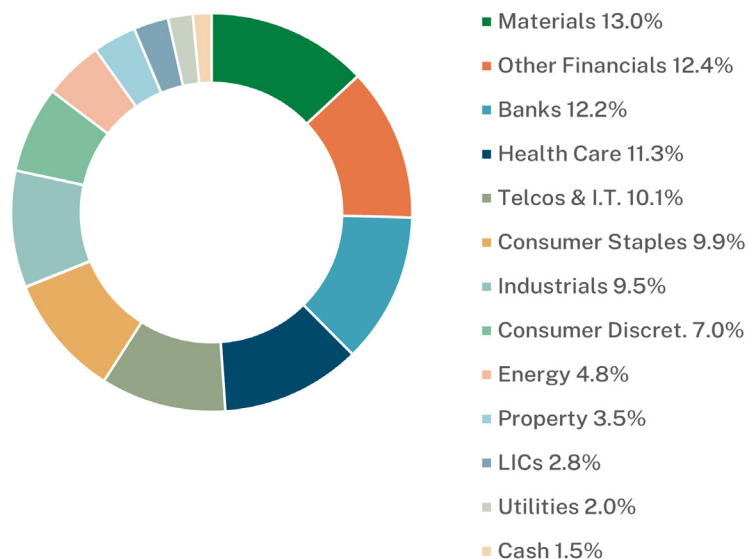

Performance across the market varied. Unsurprisingly in this environment, defensive sectors were among the best performers, including consumer staples, utilities and telecommunications companies. In contrast, banks fell sharply and technology stocks had a reversal in fortunes. Energy stocks also declined on falling oil prices. A diverse group of companies contributed positively to the portfolio's performance for the month, including EML Payments (up +22.0%), Reece (up +17.7%), APA Group (up +16.2%) and Sonic Healthcare (up +6.7%).
