Oscar Oberg comments on Myer's latest deal

The WAM Microcap (ASX: WMI) investment portfolio increased during the month. Corporate bookmaker PointsBet Holdings (ASX: PBH) and life insurance and financial services company Generation Development Group (ASX: GDG) were contributors to the investment portfolio performance.

PointsBet Holdings' September 2024 quarter results delivered top-line growth across Australia and Canada. Its Australian business recorded a 7% growth in net wins during the quarter due to market share gains, richer product mix and more efficient promotional spend. Its Canadian business also performed well, reporting strong growth in both Sports Wagering and iGaming net wins. Management believes the Canadian business is on track to break even in terms of cash flow in this financial year. We believe management's focus on leveraging its existing technology and brand marketing spend will drive further operational leverage in both Australia and Canada. If management meets its long-term earnings before interest, taxes, depreciation, and amortisation (EBITDA) margin target of $11 million to $16 million, we expect a positive step-change in PointsBet Holdings' valuation.

Generation Development Group had a strong start to the financial year with record bond flows for the September 2024 quarter. Lifetime annuity sales were the key driver resulting in a 33% increase in funds under management (FUM) on the previous period. Pleasingly, management also reported FUM growth in its recent acquisition, Lonsec Holdings, which increased 10% during the September quarter driven by a combination of strong inflows and market growth. Investors' inflation concerns, uncertainty around superannuation regulations and Australia's current taxation thresholds are seeing a growing demand by advisers looking for flexible, tax-effective investment options, such as investment bonds. We like Generation Development Group as we think it is well-placed to capitalise on this market growth, given its strong competitive position in investment bonds and focus on strategic growth across its insurance and research businesses.
