Patties Foods Recalls Nanna's Raspberries linked to a specific source in China as a precaution

Patties Foods has extended its Consumer Recall to include Nanna's Raspberries 1kg packs following investigations through our global supply chain over the past few days that have identified the potential link to a source in China common to the source of the products the subject of the previous product recalls.

Patties Foods MD & CEO, Steven Chaur, said the further recall is a precautionary measure in the interests of public safety.

"While there are no confirmed test results indicating a potential link to Hepatitis A, we are working proactively with Health Authorities based on the information they have presented to date."

As with the previous product recalls, it is too early at this stage to ascertain whether this product recall will have any financial impact on the company and if so, whether that impact will be material. This aspect of this and the previous recalls is also being monitored and the market will be informed promptly and without delay if there are any material developments.

Yours faithfully
